

PAS 99 Integrated Management: Features and benefits

PAS 99 is the world's first integrated management system requirements specification based on the six common requirements of ISO Guide 72. PAS 99 has been developed in response to market demand to enable you to align your processes and procedures into one holistic structure in order to run your operations more effectively.

| Business risk | Business need | Feature of standard | Advantages (How will it help?) | Benefits (Whats in it for my business?) |
|--|---|--|---|---|
| Management of multiple management standards can be wasteful in time and resources. | To streamline the business and have 'one' management system in place. | Requires one set of processes that covers all of the organization's activities. | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Requirements of the specific standards are coordinated. Workloads are streamlined, duplication and bureaucracy are reduced. Systems for internal audits, document control, training and administration are much more effective. | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> More management time for proactive measures. Only one management review required which should be part of a board meeting therefore showing top-level commitment to the system. |
| Conflict between business systems. | To avoid internal empires, provide clearly defined objectives and have one system benefitting the whole organization. | Requires that consequences of any actions are taken into account and consideration given to how they affect each other and their associated risks. | Ensures a more holistic approach to management. | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> One system means less time spent on correcting impacts on other areas. More management time for implementing proactive measures which will ultimately lead to increased customer satisfaction. |
| Poor internal and external communication. | Clear communication to staff and stakeholders. | Standard requires there to be clear communications both internally and externally. | Communications are often one of the most difficult parts of management, therefore having one management system can improve communications across the organization. | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Less time spent correcting mixed messages. Both internal and external communication improved. More management time for continual improvement. |

Inspiring trust for a more resilient world.
